

National Geographic Travel and Brand USA Team Up for Great American Road Trip

Chicago - April 08, 2014

The National Geographic Travel group and Brand USA, the nation's destination marketing organization, announced a digital campaign developed to showcase iconic road trips across America to the international travelers. Through the campaign, Andrew Evans, National Geographic Travel's Digital Nomad, will be embarking on five awe-inspiring road trips that showcase the beauty, bounty and unique travel experiences one can expect from the American open road. The partnership was announced today at the Brand USA press conference held at U.S. Travel's annual IPW conference in Chicago.

"I have always been fascinated by road trips and feel that there can be no better way to see the real heart and soul of the United States than by driving cross-country," said Evans. "I will document my experiences and the people and places that touch me along the way in real-time using various social media channels, so that my followers may embark on this once-in-a-lifetime journey with me."

"One of the best ways to discover and experience the USA is by car and that's why we've enlisted the support of National Geographic Traveler and Digital Nomad, Andrew Evans to take us along for a ride," said Christopher Thompson, Brand USA's president and CEO. "Andrew will help tell the story of the USA by car as he travels along 23 destinations reporting his experience through Brand USA and National Geographic's digital channels."

Evans begins his journey today in Chicago traveling the famed Route 66. From now until May 10, Evans will tweet, blog, vlog and "Instagram" on NationalGeographic.com's Digital Nomad blog (<http://digitalnomad.nationalgeographic.com>), his Twitter feed @WheresAndrew and his Where's Andrew Facebook page throughout his trip through Illinois, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California. The Digital Nomad site will also feature an interactive map tracking Evans' whereabouts throughout his journey. Evans will also upload videos and photo galleries from each of the cities and states he visits. Four additional road trips the Digital Nomad will be documenting throughout the year are Rhythms of the South, the Northeast Corridor, Mountains and Prairies, and Western Trails.

About Andrew Evans

Evans is a veteran travel writer for National Geographic Traveler magazine and National Geographic's Intelligent Travel blog. In 2013, he journeyed to Tanzania, where he climbed Mount Kilimanjaro; visited Montana; took a trip to the Galápagos Islands; and explored his heritage in Texas. In 2012, he went Around the World by Private Jet with National Geographic Expeditions; explored Switzerland's diverse cantons, foods and languages; traveled through Norway's biggest cities; and uncovered Maya mysteries in Mexico. He also went to South Africa and Malawi and was one of the first to report the death of Malawian President Bingu wa Mutharika. In 2011, he explored the best of Ontario, Canada; tweeted and blogged around Japan; and wine and dined his way through Louisiana, experiencing the best of the bayous and New Orleans. He finished the year skiing, snow-shoeing and trekking through western Canada's ski country with renowned mountaineers, ski instructors and naturalists.

In 2010, Evans journeyed from Washington, D.C., to Antarctica — a 10,000-mile trip through 14 countries — using public transportation as far as he could go. He rode buses to Ushuaia in Argentina, the southernmost city in the world, and then boarded the vessel National Geographic Explorer to Antarctica.
